

7 Tips for buying .. Crowd control barrier stands

1. It might sound like common knowledge .. but check out the company who you're buying from. You wouldn't buy a new car from the back of someone's garage .. and it's the same with crowd control stands. Some people go to an overseas trade show .. bring in a few products and sell them as cheap and as quick as they can. Then move on to another industry. Visionchart has been a supplier of Communication Products since 1983. We'll be always be there to talk to .. if you ever need help or have a problem.
2. Make sure that the base is wide enough to ensure stability. Many 'cheap' competitors have bases as small as 210mm. Guess what happens ... they topple over .. with all the liability issues associated with that ...
3. Make sure that the base does not scratch your floor. Particularly relevant if you have a timber or polished stone floor. All our bases use a moulded plastic polymer that's suitable weighted. Not cast iron that scratches .. or no little rubber 'strips' that can fall off after a week or so.
4. Buy stands that allow you flexibility. This means consider stands that have a professional sign attachment available. And that it doesn't need some professors degree to somehow fit it .. and then when you do it flops over at an angle.
5. Consider how easy it will be to change things over if there's a problem. All our Vision Q retractable belts have a screw in attachment. Simply twist and unscrew the whole top section. No fiddly undoing of small screws.
6. Make sure that the stands use commercial grade stainless steel. Some stands are just chrome plated. All our stands are fully stainless steel .. even our rope ends and our sign attachments. Chrome plating just doesn't last .. and depending on how well it's done .. pretty soon it could be peeling off .. particularly if the base metal has not been properly polished and prepared.
7. And finally ... what warranty is being offered. We have a manufacturers warranty of 8 years ... that's better than a Rolls Royce ! So we really are proud of our products and are prepared to back it up !

We hope this helps you in your decision making process.
